DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

The Hunterstown Historic District encompasses most of the small town of Hunterstown which is located in Straban Township, Adams County along Beaver Dam Creek on Rt. 394 and Granite Station Road. In this town of 53 main structures, 49 lie within the original perimeters of the town. Originally platted by the towns founder, David Hunter, in 1749 or 1750, the town was known as Woodstock. It has also been known as Straban Center and was renamed Hunterstown in 1800. Many of the buildings present today are present on the 1858 and 1872 maps but most have been altered.

Hunterstown: Structures included in Historic District:
Building numbers are keyed to Historic District Map

1. Great Conewago Presbyterian Church: Placed on the National Register January 14, 1975. This large fieldstone church is simple in its design and decoration. Basically rectangular in shape its dimensions are 51' by 65'. Three bays by four bays, the church has a gable roof with boxed cornices with returns and decorated with small dentils. There is a stone water table below the windows on all four sides. Four interior brick chimneys are located over the first and fourth bays on both sides of the roof.

The front (east) is three bays wide with a center door. The first story windows have rounded stone arches and are 15/15 with a 13 pane semi-circular fanlight. There are two types of sills on the church: Type 1 are maulded and type 2 are plain.

The door is double and pannelled with a semi-circular fanlight window. A large cut stone serves as the step and a large lantern style light hangs over the entranceway. The inset datestone reads Joseph Henderson 1787. Joseph Henderson was the pastor at the time of the church's construction.

The north side has three bays of 15/15 panes and semi-circular fanlights. Sills of bays 1 & 3 are type 1, and bays 3 & 4 are type 2. The rear (west) has only two bays today although it appears that there was originally a third. The center window or door area has been filled in with brick. The Northwest window has a sill of type 2 and the southwest window sill is a concrete replacement. The south side today has six windows but early records show that bay 2 & 5 were once doors. In 1837 the two doors of the south side were converted to windows and the entranceway was moved to the east end. Sills in bay 1, 3, & 4 have type 1, bay 2 & 5 (former doors) have no sills, and bay 6 has type 2.

The interior was one large room but during the 1837 renovations a covered narthex and choir balcony was added. The center pews face directly west and have a central wall dividing each pew into two. The side pews face the west on a central facing diagonal. There is a central stage at the west end with small rows on either side. Six, four light chandelers light the church. Windows are deep set.

Organized in 1740, the first church building was a 32' x 40' log structure located where the cemetery is today. The present stone structure replaced the log structure in 1787. In 1851, the Hunterstown English and Classical Academy was established. Housed in a two story brick structure also located on the church grounds. Bricks from his building were used to construct the second church building on the grounds in 1887 which is used as a Sunday School today.

2. A one story brick structure, 3 bays by 3 bays, with a gable roof covered with tar paper, and two small additions on rear. This structure was built in 1887 from bricks taken from the Hunterstown English and Classical Academy which stood where the cemetery is today. The brick is laid in common bond with a header row every seven-rows. There is one interior chimney in the Northeast corner. The first addition is a 2 bay wooden shed and the second a one story concrete square used as restrooms.

The front (south) is three bays wide with a center door. The 1/1 sash windows have center painted brick arches and plain panel shutters. The double panelled door has a plain transom containing the date 1887, and a carved wooden design in the arch section. Above the door in the gable is an equalateral stain-glass arch window. The east and west sides are three bays wide with windows identical to the front windows. The interior is used as a Sunday school and has a central front stage and waincoating.

3. One story gable roof log house with shed addition on rear and central porch on front. It is 3 bay by 3 bays with a central door and modern sash windows.

4. Intrusion; A modern one story double house, 5 bays by 2 with a gable roof and shed addition on rear. Doors are located in the 2nd & 4th bays.

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The town of Hunterstown is located 6 miles north east of Gettysburg in Adams County, Pennsylvania. When Adams County was still part of York County this area was divided into large farm holdings. The area covered by the town today was once the holding of Hans Morrison who owned and ran a tavern on the road from East Berlin to Gettysburg. On March 14, 1764 David Hunter patented 180 acres from Hans Morrison and plotted the village of Woodstock. First lot sales were to William Galbreath on April 2, 1764. (York County Deed Book, B485, Deed 44.) A lot also sold to Samuel Dickson, Jr. Some of the original street names were King Street, Hamilton Street, Green Street and Rose Alley.

In 1792 the Hans Morrison land was sold by Sheriff sale to William Scott who renamed the town Hunterstown in 1800.

The villages military history is almost contemporary with its founding. It began with a review of area soldiers from the Hunterstown area raised in preparation for the French and Indian War. In this conflict David Hunter served as captain of the Hunterstown militia under General Forbes in the expedition against Fort Duquesne.

By the end of the eighteenth century Hunterstown was the center of a rich countryside of farms and rivaling communities. When Adams County was formed from York County in 1800, Hunterstown was the center of new county's population. Chosen as one of the two possible sites for the county seat, Hunterstown was champeoned by the Shrivvers, Dickens and Brinkerhoffs. But the farm land of James Getty was chosen instead due to its central geographical location and donation by Getty of lands for use for courthouse and other public buildings.

Hunterstown continued to grow despite this set back. In 1820, John Studebaker opened a forge four miles northeast of Hunterstown. Later this industrialist moved to South Bend, Indiana where he opened the Studebaker Wagon Manufacturing Company which was later converted to the Studebaker Automobile Company.

An early post village, Hunterstown as a self sustaining village developed rapidly with its possible high point just prior to the Civil War. The town at this time supported two churches, an educational academy, two chair factories, three stores, a tavern-hotel, a doctor's office, a blacksmith shop, a tailor shop, shoemaker shop and a wagon shop. The population of Hunterstown in 1820 was 103.

During the Civil War Hunterstown was not only the scene of a skirmish, but also, as in previous wars, responsible for enlisting men. A National Guard of 45 was organized at Hunterstown on February 12, 1859, and several persons from the area joined the Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry. One of the town's most distinguished citizens was Dr. Charles Edward Goldsborough who interrupted his practice in 1860 to join the United States Army at Frederick, Maryland. As a medical officer Goldsborough established hospitals at Ball's Bluff and at Frederick after the Battle of Antietam. He was twice captured by Lee's army and once wounded before returning to Hunterstown.

The Confederate invasion of Pennsylvania in 1863 which ended with the Battle of Gettysburg posed as much a threat to Hunterstown residents during those summer months as to Gettysburg residents. By mid-June Confederate probing raiders had reached the outskirts of Harrisburg, but were recalled south by General Lee who feared advancing Union troops. Chambersburg and then Cashtown were cited for the projected holocaust and in response Confederate divisions made their retreat in a southwestwardly direction. One such division under Maj. General Jubal A. Early reached Hunterstown July 1 on its route west. However, Early's travel was cut short by news of fighting at Gettysburg. A skirmish ensued at Hunterstown on July 2 when corps of the Potomac Army met the Confederates there.

The Great Conewago Church was used as a hospital following this skirmish. Most of the building present in Hunterstown at the time of the Civil War are still present. Unfortunately much has been altered through additions, siding and new roofing. Very little new building has taken place since the late 1800's.

Hunterstown, though somewhat altered, is a fine example of an early post village which saw its highest success during the 1820's to 50's.
