Describe the present and original (if known) physical appearance

The proposed extensions are located in Newtown Borough and are adjacent to the present Newtown Historic District. The current district consists of the the original Newtown Historic District (listed on the National Register on December 17, 1979) and the Sycamore Street Extension (listed on the National Register on February 25, 1986). The two proposed extensions are physically separate from each other and will be referred to as the North Extension and the South Extension in this nomination. The North Extension extends the present district northward toward Jefferson Avenue and westward to Lincoln Avenue. Approximately two blocks south of this extension across the existing district, the South Extension begins at the Penn and Chancellor Street intersection and continues southward including several buildings on Sterling Street. The two extensions include a total of 122 contributing and sixteen non-contributing buildings, with eighty-seven contributing and ten non-contributing in the North Extension, and thirty-five contributing and six non-contributing in the South Extension.

The great majority of buildings in the North and South Extensions are dwellings. Most of these homes are detached houses set close to the streets on small lots. A minority of the dwellings are duplexes or small row houses also located close to the streets on small parcels. Many of the dwellings have ancillary buildings such as carriage houses and sheds on their lots. The only exceptions to this pattern of residential buildings in the North Extension are a school, firehouse, former store, and two churches. The only contributing non-residential buildings in the South Extension are a brick, two-story factory built in 1884 (28-4-44), and a brick, one-story factory constructed in 1920 (28-4-49).

Most of the buildings in the two extensions are frame, two and one-half story structures. The houses are mostly three to five bays wide and two and one half stories high. About 75 buildings or almost three quarters of the buildings are frame. Twenty edifices are stone or brick. A few buildings are covered with plaster or stucco over stone, brick or frame.

The majority of buildings in the two extensions are Queen Anne or Gothic Revival style structures. A number of houses show Queen Anne influences with projecting dormers, small porches and small boxed turrets. Several houses, such as homes located along North Chancellor and Lincoln Streets, are fine high style Queen Anne buildings. For instance, two houses on the west side of North Lincoln Street (28-2-258 and 28-2-259) feature front and side porches with turned posts, round three story turrets, cross gables and dormers, and multicolored, multi-paned casement windows. A number of buildings were constructed in the Gothic Revival style. A frame house on South Chancellor Street (28-2-23), for example, features a steeply pitched roof, front cross gable, arched two over two windows, and bracketed cornice with scroll work. The African Methodist Church (28-1-73) on North Congress Street, also in the Gothic Revival style, has a steep gable roof, pointed arched windows and a belfry with pointed steeple. A few Italianate buildings are also scattered through the extensions. Two Italianate brick houses on South Chancellor Street (28-5-24 and 28-5-25) are three bays square with large bracketed cornices edging flat roofs and two over two sash framed by stone lintels. In addition, a few Colonial Revival homes are located in the extensions. The Barnsley House on North Chancellor Street (28-2-250) is in the reserved Colonial Revival style.

Most of the buildings in the two extensions were built between the mid-nineteenth and early twentieth centuries, with progressively later structures as one travels east from State Street. In the North Extension the upper ends of Liberty and Congress Streets contain houses from the mid-nineteenth century. An early black community was centered around the A.M.E. Church on Congress Street, and "Firman's Block" of modest frame row houses (28-2-174 through 177) was constructed about 1872 by local carpenter Joseph Firman. Late nineteenth and early twentieth century buildings are located farther east in the North Extension along Chancellor Street and Lincoln Avenue. A number of well preserved c. 1900 Queen Anne homes are found on North Lincoln Avenue, including parcels 28-5-62, 28-2-265 and 28-2-255.

Most of the houses in the South Extension were constructed in the later nineteenth century. The two Italianate houses on South Chancellor Street (28-5-24 and 28-5-25) were erected in 1870. A well proportioned frame Victorian house on South Chancellor Street (28-5-23) was built for James Briggs in 1876. A number of more modest single and double homes line Sterling Street. These were built about 1890 to house workers who labored at the 1884 factory nearby.

The extensions retain good integrity. The extensions have a low proportion of non-contributing buildings (thirteen per cent). Most of the non-contributing structures are one to two and one half story houses constructed since 1936. Contributing buildings survive in much their original condition. Small additions and modern siding such as asbestos shingles have slightly altered some of the contributing buildings.

The North and South Extensions reflect residential and industrial growth of Newtown in the mid-nineteenth to early twentieth centuries. Representing a narrower time span than the existing district, which was first settled in the seventeenth century, the North and South Extensions are more homogeneous in character than the present district. However, both extensions are a continuation of the development patterns exhibited by buildings along Washington Avenue in the present district, with progressively later buildings and increasing stylistic refinement as one travels east of State Street.

stretching to Chancellor Street and Lincoln Avenue by the early twentieth century.

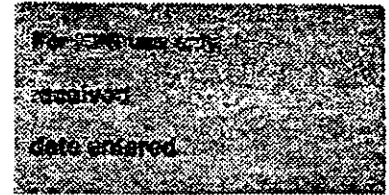

The present Newtown Historic District incorporates the late seventeenth and eighteenth century section of Newtown and part of the nineteenth and early twentieth century development to the east. The original district, which was listed on the National Register on December 17, 1979, includes the eastern half of the Common and the commercial buildings along State Street. It also encompasses later nineteenth and early twentieth century dwellings to the east along both sides of Washington Avenue. The Sycamore Avenue Extension, listed on the National Register on February 25, 1986, includes the western half of the Common. Thus the present district represents the late seventeenth and eighteenth century history of Newtown, but only part of the nineteenth and early twentieth century eastward expansion of Newtown.

The areas in the proposed North and South Extensions are an integral part of the nineteenth and early twentieth century eastward expansion. The North extension was developed by the breakup of two large farms in the nineteenth century. The first farm, located north of Washington Avenue between State Street and Congress Street, was split in 1836 into forty-nine lots known as the Archambault development. Houses were constructed in this development from 1836 to the early twentieth century. The second farm, situated between Congress Street and Lincoln Avenue north of Washington Avenue, was divided soon after the Civil War. Houses in later Victorian styles were constructed in this second development between the Civil War and the turn of the century. Houses in the South Extension were built between 1870 and the early twentieth century. The completion of the Philadelphia, Newtown and New York Railroad Company line to southeast Newtown in 1878 also fomented the construction of two industrial buildings in the South Extension by the early twentieth century. Therefore the North and South Extensions represent much of Newtown's expansion eastward from the original Common.

The North and South Extensions include a significant collection of mid-nineteenth to early twentieth century residential architecture in Newtown. The homes in the North and South Extensions are designed predominantly in vernacular, Queen Anne, and to a lesser extent Gothic Revival styles, with a few Italianate buildings also included. The North and South Extensions contain a number of excellent, high style examples of the Queen Anne, Gothic Revival and Italianate styles, such as Queen Anne buildings on North Lincoln Avenue (28-2-258 and 28-2-259), the Gothic Revival African Methodist Episcopal Church (28-1-73) on North Congress Street, and two Italianate houses on South Chancellor Street (28-5-24 and 28-5-25).

The collection of residential architecture in the North and South Extensions is much like the mid-nineteenth to early twentieth century architecture found in the existing district east of Court Street and Liberty Street. This eastern portion of the existing district also contains predominantly vernacular, Queen Anne and Gothic Revival homes. A number of the dwellings in this eastern section show Queen Anne influences with projecting dormers and small porches, or Gothic Revival traits such as steeply pitched roofs and front cross gables. Like the best examples in the North and South Extensions, several Gothic Revival buildings in the eastern portion of the existing district feature scroll work along bracketed cornices and arched two over two windows. As in the North and South Extensions, the best examples of Queen Anne homes show side and front porches, projecting turrets, and multicolored, multipaned casement windows. Taken together, the eastern section of the existing district and the North and South extensions contain a large, fine collection of mid-nineteenth to early twentieth century architecture, particularly Gothic Revival and Queen Anne dwellings.

The South Extension gains added significance as being representative of the late nineteenth and early twentieth century industrialization of Newtown. The arrival of the railroad line in Newtown sparked the construction of a two and three quarters story, brick building by the Newtown Improvement Company in 1884. This structure (28-4-44) still stands along South State Street. The building was used primarily by the U.S. Bobbin and Shuttle Company between the 1880s and the mid-twentieth century. The U.S. Bobbin and Shuttle Company was one of Newtown's largest employers with forty-two males employed in 1919. In the early twentieth century other small factories were also constructed in Newtown, including a planing mill, dairy ice cream plant, fertilizer company, carriage firm, and handle works. In 1920 a small china company built a one story factory building located at South State Street and Sterling Street in the South Extension (28-4-49). This industrial development in Newtown was modest in comparison to the Bucks County towns of Bristol, Morrisville, or further north, Sellersville, Perkasio and Quakertown. Newtown ranked as a smaller industrial center in the county, much like Doylestown.

Thus the North and South Extensions represent the mid-nineteenth to early twentieth century expansion of Newtown. The areas encompassed in the North and South Extensions are an integral part of the eastward expansion of Newtown. They include significant collections of mid-nineteenth to early twentieth century architecture that are much like the architecture found in the eastern section of the existing district. The South Extension also represents Newtown's turn-of-the century industrialization.

Newtown Historic District (Boundary Increase)

Continuation sheet North and South Extensions item number 10

Page 4

Boundary Justification:

The original Newtown Historic District (listed on the National Register on December 17, 1979) included the primary commercial area. Subsequent to the listing of this district, comprehensive historic site surveys were conducted in both Newtown Township and Newtown Borough. The surveys provided information on which to base proposals to expand the district. On February 25, 1986 the National Register approved a boundary increase for this district encompassing the Sycamore Street Extension in Newtown Township. The North and South Extensions proposed in this nomination are intended to represent the town's eastward expansion from the mid 19th to early 20th centuries. The boundaries of the North and South Extensions have been drawn to include buildings that contribute to the history of Newtown's development and to exclude modern buildings and greatly altered older buildings. The boundary of the South Extension is defined by a railroad right of way and by industrial buildings that have been greatly altered or are less than fifty years old. A modern housing development also borders the South Extension to the southwest. The boundary of the North Extension is defined on the north by recent homes and an apartment building located immediately north of this extension. The boundary of the North Extension is defined on the east by houses that are less than fifty years old, including a large modern tract development.
